Conference, Inland Empire Desert Regional Education Consortium, Riverside Community College and other organizations. He has also done a number of podcasts for a variety of organizations.

Larry offers over 100 different webinar topics covering almost every aspect of workforce development. He specializes in providing training for front line staff and their managers and supervisors that work in programs serving people with multiple and severe barriers to employment. His goal is to provide webinar training that is practical, innovative and highly effective in improving services and program outcomes for organizations serving populations with multiple and severe barriers to employment.

Larry's webinars are informed by his many years of experience providing direct services to a wide range of hard-to-employ populations served by the workforce system. He has kept his direct service skills current by doing many hours of volunteer work with individuals facing significant challenges to becoming successful in the labor market. Larry has developed many of his ideas and skills by playing a leading role in the design, development and implementation of more than 150 workforce development, education and training projects and programs.

Besides his extensive experience with job seekers, Larry has spent many years as a private sector consultant and trainer. He has worked with small businesses and Fortune 500 companies in a wide variety of sectors. He is a highly respected consultant and trainer in the private sector. Larry has been selected to be the keynote speaker at conferences sponsored by Microsoft and Apple Computer.

One of his specialties is helping businesses improve their hiring practices. This has given him an insider's view of how employers go about making the hiring decision. As he presents this information in his webinars about working with employers, these unique perspectives help workforce staff improve their outcomes with businesses. Larry offers many different webinars related to improving outcomes with employers.
